There are many things to love about A Lady Unrivaled. Not the least of which, the way that these ladies of the manor are not bound by society's restrictions or expectations but carry concealed weapons on their persons and charge in to save the day despite being barely pregnant and nearly due (two different people there, in case you were wondering).

There are many things to love about A Lady Unrivaled. Not the least of which, the way that these ladies of the manor are not bound by society's restrictions or expectations but carry concealed weapons on their persons and charge in to save the day despite being barely pregnant and nearly due (two different people there, in case you were wondering).

But we had all these marvelously strong yet feminine characters in the previous two books as well, and while I love them there is just something about A Lady Unrivaled that shines the tiniest bit brighter.

That light is Lady Ella Myerston, front and center stage. With her delightful quirks and her charming wit and her sincere heart, she not only spreads sunshine everywhere she walks within the pages of the book but to the reader as well. She truly is a lady unrivaled, and I was thrilled to meet her again and see her story come to life. Combined with Lord James Cayton (whom we've also met before), their chemistry is fantastic and I'm not sure we've yet stopped smiling at their banter.

Underlying the awesome characters and the witty humor and the delicious romance (that first kiss is "WOW!") is a gentle theme of trust. Trusting who we are in Jesus, not living in the regret of who we were without Him. Trusting what we know is right, even when we can't see the outcome. Another theme is more sobering, specifically of how deep a pit that greed can lead us into, far deeper than anyone ever dreamed we would fall. And while it is true that, as Corrie Ten Boom said so wisely, there is no pit so deep that God is not deeper still, the story woven so beautifully, and also so tragically, throughout the Ladies of the Manor series reminds us that we all have a choice when given the opportunity for Divine Rescue.

A Lady Unrivaled takes you from laughter to tears to holding your breath in suspense to fond smiles of kinship to fanning yourself over that doozy of a kiss. And always always, no matter your current emotional state, it keeps you totally immersed in the story and in these characters. Reuniting with beloved characters from the previous books, as well as some rather dastardly ones that we can't quite seem to get rid of, is quite simply the icing on the cake for what is an absolutely fantastic conclusion to an absolutely fantastic series!

The romantic storylines are concluded in each book so there is no cliffhanging will-they, won't-they?; but the mystery plot is overarching and because I haven't read the previous books, I have to confess to feeling rather adrift for quite a large portion of the first few chapters of this one.

I gleaned that someone was out to acquire the "Fire Eyes", as the diamonds are known, by whatever means necessary; that the hero of this book had been associated with some Rather Bad Men in the past and that the heroine is a determined to eliminate the threat to her family and friends by finding the diamonds and then "well, she's not quite sure what to do with them, but whatever it is will be better than letting them fall into the undeserving hands of whoever is looking for them.

The author is thoughtful enough to have included a list of

at the beginning, so I was at least able to work out who was who and was related to whom without too much trouble.

Lady Ella Myerston is the sister of the Duke of Nottingham (hero of book two,

) and is currently staying with her friend Brook, Duchess of Stafford (

) at the Staffords' country seat in the Cotswolds. Brook is not best pleased when she discovers Ella reading up about the red diamonds and the curse that surrounds them; being around them put Brook into serious danger in the past and she doesn't want the same fate to befall her friend. But Ella won't be put off so easily and continues with her reading in secret.

Ooooh, I'm so sad this series is over! But I LOVED Ella's story! Happy sigh. :)

Lord James Cayton was a unlikable/unlovable character in the first two books but life and God have a way of changing people. With the death of his wife and the birth of his daughter, Cayton's heart and eyes have been opened to the desire to be a completely different man than he has been. His is the story that we all love to read - repentance, redemption, grace, and the second chance that allows him to strive to be a Godly man and the protector of his family. When that "family" expands to include the incorrigible Lady Ella, Lord Cayton has his work cut out for him!

I love Lady Ella!! She is so delightfully cheerful with just the right touch of mischievousness that makes her character so much fun. And it's not a fake cheeriness either. She has her moments of being down and she can be serious when she needs to be but for the most part she just makes the choice to be happy where she's at and in the moment. She's much more aware of the danger that has been following her family and friends than they know and is determined to do her part to put an end to it! And in the process, if she happens to fall in love with the man no one is quite sure deserves her, Lady Ella might just be the one thing that emboldens him to accept the love and grace of a Savior who does give second (and third, and forth) chances.

The give and take of Lord Cayton's grouchiness and Lady Ella's flirtatious cheerfulness was so much fun to read. I loved the way she sees the truth of who he's trying to become behind his grouchy exterior and the way he balances out her sometimes impulsive nature. And oh the sparks that fly between these two! They have the best first kiss scene I've read in awhile! Totally swoon worthy and so sweet yet at the same time humorous. It was great! :)

The mystery, danger, and suspense of the Fire Eyes continues in this book with the return of Lady Catherine Pratt and her brother Lord Rushworth. Lord Rushworth is so despicable and his character just sends boogeyman shivers up your spine! Lady Catherine, however, is so broken, and suffering the consequences of her choices in life, that you can't help but feel sorry for her. Will she finally see the error of her ways and choose a different path?

If you like Edwardian romances with a touch of suspense and danger, this epic series will satisfy! This series will go down in history as one of my all time favorites!! :)

A Lady Unrivaled was a beautiful end to the Ladies of the Manor trilogy by Roseanna M. White. Both of the main characters were introduced in the previous novels, and watching them fall in love was fun, even though they were unwilling at first. Lady Ella had already been one of my favorite characters and, perhaps, the character most like me in the series. Lord Cayton was not a character I particularly cared for in the previous books, since he broke the heart of one of Brook's cousins and married for money, but the growth that began in him in The Reluctant Duchess continued, making him a wonderful main character. Both Cayton and Ella struggled with some insecurity issues due to some of their previous mistakes. It was wonderful to see them change and mature in the light of God's, and each other's, love.

The situation with the Fire Eyes was the other major conflict in A Lady Unrivaled. Lord Rushworth was as determined as ever to get the diamonds, though he claimed the only reason was to save his sister from the "Russian mobster" who already gave them a down-payment. He was dark and creepy as usual, but seeing him with a shard of humanity through his attraction to Ella somehow made him even worse. He is not an enemy I would wantâ€™ much less a suitor! The conclusion of this tale was immensely satisfying and tied up a few loose ends with the other characters, including Lady Prattâ€™s grief over her sonâ€™s death.

I enjoyed this novel and trilogy very much and would recommend it to those who like sweet, historical romances.

In the conclusion of the Ladies of the Manor series we have Lady Ella's story. She is portrayed as an avid reader and researcher that is prone to get lost. The main male character is Cayton and he has an unpleasant track record with women. I enjoyed the comedic moments between them and Cayton's hobby. The story line had some strong points such as the addition of a Russian character.

A nice part of this series was that there was a common thread about red diamonds. In A Lady Unrivaled we get a conclusion to the traveling and notorious jewels. While this third novel was not my favorite of the series, it was a solid novel. I recommend the entire series for fans of Regency novels.
