But there were problems heading their way in the form of another Master – the chaos and mayhem would disrupt many lives.

Brigadier General Charles Ferguson and his team, which included Sean Dillon, Major Giles Roper and Daniel Holley, were always prepared for anything. But the invasion of security by the Master was shocking – he seemed to be everywhere and to know it all. The insertion of al-Qaeda and ISIS into their world was bad enough, but to have it on their doorstep was another thing entirely.

As the bodies mounted and the threat of danger increased, the anger of the team escalated. Would they find the Master before he made good on his threats? Or would they lose more of their team?

by Jack Higgins is another fast paced, tension-filled cracker of a thriller that I thoroughly enjoyed. I did find this one not quite up to the author's usual standards but I would still recommend it, and hope he continues the Sean Dillon series for a long time to come.

#22 in the Sean Dillon series. A joint effort of the "Prime Minister's Private Army", an ex-US President, and the head of the White House "Basement" take up arms against a resurgent al-Qaeda movement and the Irish and English thugs it enlists. Plenty of action and as is normal, not much to involve deep thinking. Perfect for fans of the series.

Sean Dillon series - In Ulster, Northern Ireland, a petty criminal kills a woman in a drunken car crash. Her sons swear revenge. In London, Sean Dillon and his colleagues in the "Prime Minister's private army," receive a warning from a new leader of al-Qaeda, who calls himself simply the Master. Dillon took out the previous Master, and his successor is plotting his revenge. In Washington, D.C., a special projects director with the CIA, frustrated at not getting permission from the President for his daring anti-terrorism plan, decides to put it in motion anyway. Soon, the ripples from these events will meet and overlap, creating havoc in their wake.

I would like to thank First to Read for providing a copy of this book for review. Once again Jack Higgins has written a thriller that kept me turning pages late into the night. Sean Dillon and General Ferguson's staff of operatives are contacted by a new Master from al-Qaeda who seems to be well informed of their movements. Using a number of contacts, he sets a continuous stream of traps and obstacles as they try to discover his identity and location.

I would like to thank First to Read for providing a copy of this book for review. Once again Jack Higgins has written a thriller that kept me turning pages late into the night. Sean Dillon and General Ferguson's staff of operatives are contacted by a new Master from al-Qaeda who seems to be well informed of their movements. Using a number of contacts, he sets a continuous stream of traps and obstacles as they try to discover his identity and location.

For readers of Higgins' books, they will be delighted to see the return of familiar characters. Sean Dillon has an easy manner, but is positively deadly when need be. He is accompanied by Hannah, his niece, a music student who is comfortable with keyboards and guns, and Sara Gideon, a much-decorated veteran. Whether traveling to Timbuktu to break an antiquities smuggling ring or to Ireland to track a legend of lost gold bullion, the action does not stop and the stories blend together. There are weaknesses. The story sometimes becomes predictable and Higgins introduces a number of new characters that make brief appearances. However, it is a fast-moving story and guaranteed to entertain.

I had been looking forward to reading the next book in this series for a while and I was not disappointed. I really enjoyed being close to all the old characters in this series. They were well done as always. I look forward to reading the next in the series. Sean is wonderful as always. The storyline is fantastic. Keep the good writing coming. I received an ebook copy of this book from Firsttoread for a fair and honest opinion.
