I've seen a lot of reviews stating that this is a cute and simple story, but I have to kind of disagree. (Except on the cuteness, it's cute!). This last volume deals with pretty deep issues (identity, family, home) but it's so well presented that it seems simple. Kanata Konami's way of telling and presenting the story is pretty clever if you try nitpicking it. She can capture a feeling/the atmosphere in a scene with just a couple of frames and she's great at pacing. The story has it own pac Kanata Konami's way of telling and presenting the story is pretty clever if you try nitpicking it. She can capture a feeling/the atmosphere in a scene with just a couple of frames and she's great at pacing. The story has it own pace and it felt very obvious to me as a reader when the story ground to a dramatic halt or sped on for the more exciting parts.

And I hadn't realized that this was the last volume, so while the ending was perfect, I got a slight shock that this was the last I was going to read about Chi. I've enjoyed this manga a lot!

This fourth and final anthology delved into much deeper issues than the first couple, which were pretty much just endless pages about cute kitten antics...which I still adored, by the way. I mean, I have cats, which means I've had kittens, which means I could relate. Completely and totally. Besides, Chi looks like an anime version of Howard, one of my cats. How could I NOT love Chi and her shenanigans?!?

Part 3 touched on some issues as Chi learned about friendship and family and home and how lucky she is to have all that ( sniffle!). Things were hinted at, but nothing was really revealed. But Part 4 brought out the Argh, my poor bookish heart!! These final volumes are both heartbreaking and wonderful. Wish the stories about Chi didn't have to end ♡•❧
