is the story of Nora Grey, an average high school student going about her business as usual -- until her Biology teacher rearranges the class seating and places her next to the dangerous-looking new kid, Patch Cipriano.Â Nora gets a weird feeling from Patch, and things just keep going from bad to worse as Nora becomes convinced that she is being stalked, and may even be the target of murderous intentions.Â Add to the list Nora's strange feelings about the Archangel ride at the amusement park and her constant near death experiences, and well, Nora's life is becoming anything but average.

When I finished reading

, I had to mull it over for awhile.Â I really wasn't sure what to say.Â I am absolutely enthralled by the cover (athletic looking, darkly mysterious fallen angel, contorted in mid-air in grayscale?Â What's not to like?).Â I to have it because of that cover*.Â But I had a sneaking suspicion that a cover that good had to be masking something.Â Yep.Â It's a bright light to dazzle the eyes and make you *ahem* overlook any faults.

It didn't work.

Inside was the most confused, schizophrenic piece of writing I've read in some time.Â Becca Fitzpatrick didn't seem to know what she wanted, only that it had to be Ominous and Scary and Dangerous -- and Titillating, of course, and Mysterious and Sexy.Â So with those buzz words in mind, she threw a bunch of things together and let her narrator, Nora, sort them out. Nora, understandably, had some trouble with this, and the result is a thoroughly frustrating heroine who jumps to insane conclusions based on inane evidence one moment, and the next goes blithely along into obvious danger.

This rendition is entirely satire. It is not meant to offend and I mean no discourtesy. I recognize that authors put a lot of time and work into their novels and I am not trying to disrespect that. Writing a novel is hard work and is something I have never done and I certainly don't think I could do a better job. I am simply, with light-hearted intention, using humour and imagination to spark book discussion and fun and point out some issues I had with the novel.

And lastly, please don't sue me. I have no money. And I have children to feed. And I have a cat to feed as well. You wouldn't want a cat to go without food, would you? Also, pretty please with a cherry on top. I'll be your friend?*

Okay, I said, straightening up and slipping out from his overbearing presence to put some space between us.

About three things I was absolutely positive:

First, that was, without a doubt, one of the worst Twilight rip-offs I've ever had the misfortune to read.

Second, there was a part of me -- and I didn't realize how dominant that part actually was -- that insisted on reading to the bitter end in the hope it would redeem itself.

And third, I was unconditionally and irrevocably wrong in that decision.

class! Teaching kids how to get to know one another reflects the teaching of the science of human reproduction

The next day, class focuses on what qualities each student looks for in a "potential mate" and the nuances of body language when hitting on someone. Again, this is Bio! Not health, not ~ well I don't know what cause I never took a class this ridiculous. But I took a lot of sciences, and this ain't it.

Later on in the book,

Uh! that has nothing to do with high school biology! And even less to do with human reproduction. WTF? Furthermore, in the blood pressure lab, Vee is lying faceup on a table. Argh! Those lab tables are

. Chemicals, dissections! kids are not allowed to sit on them, much less lay on them. And, really unless you are checking orthostatic BP, there is really no need to lie down for five minutes before hand! All I can say is that Becca Fitzpatrick must have been homeschooled.

Later, Nora approaches her Bio teacher about switching her seat away from Patch because he makes her feel uncomfortable.

This all takes place right after Patch is seriously sexually harassing Nora in class, in front of the teacher and seemingly with the teacher's encouragement. More support for the homeschooled theory!

Nora is driving home one night, and approaches a traffic light. The light turns yellow and Nora,
